Yellowstone is probably the most well-known national park. That's not too surprising. Not only was it the first national park in the U.S., but it's considered the first official one in the world! It's no surprise that millions visit every year, either. It boasts mountains, canyons, hot springs, geysers, huge herds of bison, and much more.

But Yellowstone isn't alone! Wyoming has a second national park: Grand Teton. Like all national parks, it offers its own unique charms and experiences. The Teton Range is beautiful and easily accessible to mountain climbers. Elk are found there year-round. It has some of the oldest rocks of any national park. Plus, it's only a 10-mile (16-km) drive south of Yellowstone. You ought to stop there first!

What was the author's purpose?

- a. to convince you to visit both parks
- b. to show that one park is better than the other
