"Sweetie, you can't sit there all day and sulk," Sara's mom said. "We'll have your party next weekend. I already called everyone and made all the arrangements."

"It's not the same. My birthday is today, not next weekend." Sara turned on the television. She wanted to watch anything other than the storm. But just about every station was talking about the hurricane.

"I can't even watch my favorite shows. This hurricane is ruining everything."

Sara's mother sat down next to her. "The hurricane is ruining a lot. Look at that. Those people are trying to save their houses. Could you imagine if we lost our home?"

Sara looked at the images on the television screen. The storm did look bad. She knew she'd be really upset if her family lost their home. All her stuff would be gone forever, and where would they live?
