number 2s. Later in the game, if the caller calls "6-4," they can mark another number 2.

The first student to make a straight line horizontally, vertically, or diagonally is the winner. He or she should yell "BINGO" to let everyone know the game is over. A teacher should then check the board to be sure the student is correct.

Teaching tips:

You may want to offer a sticker, healthy snack, or other small prize to the winner.

Consider writing the math facts on the board as you call them. Visual learners may find it easier to see the problems, rather than just hear them.

Use students as callers. The winner of a game can be the caller for the the next game. (The caller may still need a teacher to help check over the boards of a potential winner.)

You may want to print the bingo boards and calling cards on card stock and laminate them so they last for years to come.
